The Texas State Bar Annual Meeting will be held in San Antonio this month from June 23rd to June 24th. The Bexar County Women’s Bar Association is participating by hosting a joint reception with other women’s law groups on June 23rd. Please see the details on the reception included in this newsletter. The reception will be a great opportunity to meet some other fabulous female attorneys from around Texas!

In addition to the reception, having the State Bar Annual Meeting in San Antonio provides other opportunities for local continuing legal education and networking. Over 80 topic will be presented, from legal apps for lawyers with smartphones to substantive areas such as family law.

In reviewing the programs for the conference, I’m reminded of the many services the State Bar offers. I’ve included a description of a few of these programs from the State Bar’s website and encourage you to obtain more information that may benefit you or your practice.

Texas Lawyers’ Assistance Program (TLAP). TLAP is the State Bar’s nationally-acclaimed program that helps members get back on track with a wealth of services and information for Texas lawyers suffering from depression, alcoholism, or other conditions.

Grievance and Ethics Information. Attorneys may call the State Bar’s helpline if there is uncertainty about an attorney’s ethical obligations in a particular situation.

Diversity Resources. The State Bar provides a variety of resources designed to help lawyers and law firms achieve opportunities for women and minority attorneys in Texas.

Advertising Review. The State Bar reviews and approves advertising, and also provides guidance on acceptable attorney advertising.

Resource Guides. The State Bar provides several resource guides on different topics, such as ethics, a new lawyer beginning practice, or a lawyer affected by troubled times.

I look forward to the BCWBA participating in the State Bar Annual Meeting this year, and hope to see you at the reception on June 23rd.

Congratulations ileta!

On 26 April 2011, at Boston College Law School’s Annual Law Day Award Ceremony, ileta A. Sumner received the Hon. David S. Judge Nelson, a graduate of Boston College (1957) and Boston College Law School (1960), became the first African American to serve on the Federal judiciary in Massachusetts, after a distinguished career in the private practice and as Chief of the Consumer Protection Division of the Office of the Attorney General of Massachusetts. ileta was escorted to Boston by her 12 year-old (dying to be a teenager) son, Joshua.
Greetings all. Summer is almost here! Many of us have already planned some wonderful vacations and are looking forward to enjoying time with our families and friends. Our children are very excited about being out of school for a couple months.

For some families, the summer months with no school in session creates a serious economic challenge in terms of feeding the children. The San Antonio Food Bank provides a summer food service program for school age children. Some information about the program follows. Please share this information with anyone who might benefit from the program.

San Antonio Food Bank’s Summer Food Service Program. When school is out, low-income children lose their access to regular daily school lunches and breakfasts. These meals typically provide at least one-third and one-fourth, respectively, of the nutrients that a child needs during the school year. Because families can’t meet this need, food banks report increases in requests for emergency food during the summer. The Summer Food Service Program fills this vacuum. It provides nutritious meals and snacks to children during this time. Meals are provided to the children free of charge.

On average, thousands of children in San Antonio receive free or reduced meals through their school’s free or reduced meal program, however during the summer months thousands of children are left undernourished and hungry. To address child hunger in southern Texas, the San Antonio Food Bank has expanded its Summer Feeding program to provide children in rural areas with free meals throughout the summer. The underlying goal of the program is to promote healthy eating habits and development, by providing children with the nourishment required for adequate mental and physical health.

Who is being served? Children. The Summer Feeding program targets school-aged children under the age of 18. The meals are distributed to housing developments, summer camps, daycares, and on-site feeding programs that are dedicated to providing for San Antonio’s less fortunate children. To locate a Summer Food Service Feeding site for your children to dine at, or if you know of someone who is in need of this service please call The United Way 211 Helpline.

As a homebound cardiac patient, I have more than my share of reading material in every media imaginable: books, blogs, pamphlets, newspapers, magazines, you name it. I’ve been reading Time® magazine since I was four (my sadistic dad’s idea of fun!), love keeping current with Entertainment Weekly and The National Enquirer. Being the only girl in the house, I even anxiously look forward to the arrival of the monthly Sports Illustrated, so that I can understand just what the heck the rules are for an “in the park double” (which I still don’t get, but at least I can fake it believingly). However I never, ever, in my wildest dreams thought I would fall madly in love with a magazine called Men’s Health which I had previously suspected was a mix of Popular Mechanic with Playboy® bunnies posing next to Ahh-nold wannabes glistening in baby oil as they grip dumbbells (the weights, not the girls). Yet much to my surprise, it is more a mishmash of Cosmopolitan, marie claire, Self and Ladies Home Journal – yes, I wrote LHJ – and goodness greatness, I LOVE IT!

The first part with which I fell in love was the recipe and dietary section. Who’da thunk a men’s magazine would teach one to cook more than macho nachos, potato skins and buffalo wings? I found amazing recipes for curry chicken with cauliflower and green beans; spinach, goat cheese and fresh tomato pizza with a crust from scratch; and, a handy chart informing the reader which fresh foods besides bananas are chock-full of potassium (a must for cardiac patients) – did YOU know that potatoes with the skin has FOUR TIMES the amount of potassium than bananas? Me neither!

In addition to great food ideas, I have found great suggestions for dealing with the everyday world, ideas befitting both women as men. I learned that I should ask my pharmacist to provide my prescriptions in the manufacturers original packaging as the amber bottles with which we are accustomed allow in light and germs that will reduce the potency of the medication. Furthermore, I found out just how easy it is to be cyber-stalked while twelve pages later I discovered incredible ways to remove some of the nastiest stains on white clothes. Moreover, I read an article that validated my supposed fixation with washing my hands a gazillion times whenever I cook chicken for it is unimaginably easy to spread sickening salmonella germs onto your spices, refrigerator door and contents, microwave, cabinet doors, your whole house. And it wasn’t just one month’s worth of articles that just happened to be good – the very next issue told me when to throw out old vitamins, when a toothbrush is through, when to replace my mattress and creative hints for online passwords that you can actually remember. After devouring those articles, I was hooked!

You have to admit that you would expect to see such items in Redbook, but in a men’s magazine? Fugged about it. But I kid you not. There are a ton of tidbits as well as lengthy articles that are truly enjoyable for the fairer sex. Now I am not denying that there was the scantily clad size 2 pictured here and there as well as the expected stories on how to get buff and toned. Nevertheless, even those articles included tips that any woman wishing to flatten her tummy a little or get rid of the “getting jiggy with it” flaps on her upper arms could adapt for her use.

So I issue this warning to Ms. Helen Gurley Brown, editor emeritus of the aforementioned Cosmo: You might want to check out the competition on the other side of the magazine aisle, for my money, I have more in common with what the writers in Men’s Health shared with me than anything those twenty-somethings have to impart in Glamour or Cosmopolitan which had been my literary bible of choice when I was in college.

Yep, my lady friends, Men’s Health is supposed to be a man’s world, but this X-chromosome is fighting with her hubby to grab it out of our mailbox even though his name is on the label. Now, I am not coercing you to go out and buy it; nonetheless, if you should see an issue laying around your doctor’s office, don’t be hesitant to browse through it. As for me, I guess I’ll do for my husband on Father’s Day what he has done for me on many a gift-giving occasion: I’ll get a subscription extension supposedly for him, just like the HDTV he put on our bedroom wall for Christmas was for me.

Well ladies, turnabout is fair play, don’t ya think? Happy Father’s Day to all the important men in our lives!
